'Orrible Hadventure

English Chappie 'Is 'er Nap Him 'igh
Places at Victoria.

An account of how Algy Augustus Cholmondeley Fitz-Herbert a sprig of British nobility, missed his passage to Australia, through boarding the wrecked steamship Yucatan at Victoria, B. C., instead of getting on the Canadian Australian liner Marama, has just come to light from an exchange.

Poor Algy's mistake arose partly because stormy weather made it necessary for the Marama to lie at the outer wharf at Victoria instead of going as usual to the inner harbor.

Tied close up beside the liner lay the battered hull of the steamship Yucatan, towed there a few weeks ago from the rocks in Ley Straits, where she was wrecked and almost torn in pieces February 16 of this year.

Though the Marama was not due to leave for Australia until 9 o'clock at night, Algy bought his ticket at midday, and as he paid for it, explained that he had just come from "dear hold Hingland and was going hout to give those bally colonials a deuce of a time, don't ye know."

At this point, officials of the line lost sight of Algy, who had expressed an intention of "titting the 'igh plaices hin dear hold 'Vic' for a few hours before sailing, don't ye know."

ALGY CERTAINLY "IT 'ER NAP."

It was almost 8:30 o'clock in the evening and quite dark when John Ford, night watchman on the Yucatan, saw Algy vainly trying to stagger along the wharf in the direction of the old wreck.

Ford has the reputation in Victoria of being the softest-hearted man who ever mounted guard over a wreck, and when he saw the well-dressed stranger making a horrible exhibition of himself on the public wharf, he was moved to pity.

"He seems a decent-looking guy," murmured Ford to himself, "I guess I ought to get him out of sight and straighten him up, before he is seen about or juggled."

Algy, who admitted between hicoughs, being "heastly, awfully, jolly tired, don't ye know," required little persuasion when Ford suggested he should come aboard the Yucatan and lie down for a rest.

The Britisher was led to one of the less damaged cabins on the Yucatan and put to bed.

Algy's sleep, though thick, was fairly sound, and according to subsequent confession, was filled with dreams of the beautiful voyage he was enjoying on the Marama. Visions of far-off Australia, its golden fleece and saffron sunshine, ran riot in his slumber.

It was when the first shafts of morning sunshine sent their slanting rays through the Porthole that Algy, still befuddled, awoke.

As his eyes opened the vessel rolled and bumped against the wharf, creaking and groaning on her lines as she rose and fell.

"ORRIBLE WRECK," CRIES ALGY.

"Where are we? We're wrecked!" shrieked the still dazed man, jumping out of bed, his startled gaze resting a moment on the battered walls of the cabin in which he had spent the night.

In an agony of terror as the whole of his past life rose before him, Algy did not heed his coat, waistcoat, shirt, and shoes, as he swiftly drew on a scanty covering and rushed on deck to escape being penned below.

Excitement Over at Hana

Chinamen Have Row, and Try to Blow
Up One of Their Countrymen.

Wednesday morning, about 2 o'clock the citizens of Hana were aroused by a terrific explosion, which caused some to think that old Halaekala had again come to life. On investigation, it was learned that a Chinaman who had aroused the enmity of some of his countrymen, was the cause of all the noise. To the fact that the would-be-murderers were not acquainted with powder, the Chinaman, and probably others, owe their lives. A quantity of black powder was placed under the shack in which the Chinaman lives, and as they knew nothing about fuses, they took some rope and saturated it with kerosene oil, in order to connect with the powder. There was plenty of space about the powder, and thus the force of the explosion was not directed entirely against the house, and though damaged to some extent, neither house or Chinaman was put completely out of commission. Deputy Sheriff Joseph is working on the case, but no one among the Chinese colony knows anything about the affair. This is the usual course pursued by the Oriental and it is about impossible to find the culprits.

As he passed the long rows of deserted cabins, he saw no one and all was silent as the grave. His own lusty cries for aid echoed hollowly through the hull.

Above, on deck, John Ford, the trusty night watchman hung, arms akimbo, over the railing of the Yucatan looking seaward at the troubled waters, which still refused to forget their anger of the previous night.

A cry of "Ere, 'elp, 'elp, hi say!" was the first thing to wake Ford from his reverie. Hastily looking round, he saw the roysterer of the night before, life-belt in hand, rushing toward him.

"Ere, 'elp, hi say; 'elp me to put hon this lifebelt. To think that you and hi ar the honly ones saved."

ALGY COLLAPSES UNDER STRAIN

At this point Algy, became inarticulate and sank in a stupor to the deck. It was several minutes before the watchman managed to bring him to.

After Algy Augustus Cholmondeley Fitz-Herbert had explained to Ford that he was on his way to the Marama the previous evening when he boarded the Yucatan, the latter grasped the situation and took him to the office of the Canadian-Australian line. There officials read out to him a string of wireless messages, which Capt. John Gibb, skipper of the Marama, had flashed from far out at sea to make certain whether the noble Algy had fallen overboard or only forgotten to come on with his suit case.

Algy has had his ticket extended, but awears with absent aspirates that "Gorbli" me, they can bloody well strike me bloomin' pink, but Hi'll take care not to miss the next bloody bloomin' boat, which leaves November 4, don't ye know, old chappie."

Vote the Republican ticket!

Philip Pali is carrying the war into the enemy's stronghold. He is making a house to house canvass among the Democrats and Home Rulers in Wailuku and Waihee, gaining votes from would be followers of Coelho and Kookoo.

Commercial Happenings

Racy News From the Capitol Regarding Sugar Stock.

Honolulu, Nov. 1

The week past developed nothing extraordinary in the stock market, save, perhaps, a steady run of sales something seldom met with at times of depression. While stocks are very low there is all the confidence that the sugar situation will justify; and in the adjustments which are now taking place, speculating has practically no place, the investing public being, for the most part, at the buying end. At this stage the indications are of lower prices in spots and perhaps all along the line for short periods of nervousness which are quite likely to appear.

It is a fortunate thing for future quotations, however, that buyers and sellers have for some weeks based their calculations upon sugar around 3.60 at no distant day, the same to continue for quite a period. In the past week or two indications have been more and more insistent that even 3.60 is too high to expect of sugar before the beet and Cuban crops are out of the way, and that 3.50 will be nearer the mark. It is upon the latter basis that calculations are at present being adjusted.

PIONEER VERY LOW.

Pioneer stock, which was $190 bid and $191.50 asked at last report, was shaky on Wednesday and Thursday, settled to $185 bid and $190 asked at the last of the week, and is now $185 bid and $187.50 asked. While it was still at $190 a total of 100 shares changed hands, the amount of money involved being $19,000. At private sale the last of the week, and not yet reported on the Exchange, 100 additional shares changed hands at $187.50.

HAWAIIAN COMMERCIAL.

Hawaiian Commercial continues around $34, the variations now depending entirely upon San Francisco quotations. A block of 50 shares sold at $34 yesterday, and although only $33.875 is bid today there is no stock to be had at that figure. Prior to the sale referred to, 90 shares in small lots changed hands at a total of $3036.75.

Hawaiian Commercial will pay a dividend next Saturday of 25 cents a share, or a total sum of $100,000.

OTHER MAUI STOCKS.

Neither Paia, Haiku, Olowalu nor Wailuku have appeared in the trading in the past week. The first three mentioned appear to be solid around $150. Wailuku, to the surprise of many, has declined to $170, which is bid. The last previous sales of this stock was at $175.

Olowalu paid a dividend yesterday of $2, being in a total sum of $3,000 to its stockholders.

SALES OF A MONTH.

The sales of Maui stocks for the month of October, ending last night, were as follows: Hawaiian Commercial, 2682 shares the highest sale being at $38.50 and the lowest at $33.75; Pioneer, 661 shares, highest $220 and lowest (official) $190; Paia, 30, at $150; Wailuku, 50 shares at $175.

VARIATIONS OF MONTH.

The variations in stocks other than those of Maui for the month have been considerable in some instances and light in others. Ewa, for instance, dropped, from $31.50 and sold as low as $28; Hawaiian Agricultural, $228 to $209; Honokaa, $14.75 to $12.625; McBryde, $5.125 to $4; Wailuku, $119 to $115.

Republican Campaign

Some Positive Reasons Why You Should
Vote the Republican Ticket.

Vote the Republican ticket!

Chas. Copp of Makawao is another Independent candidate without a platform or party behind him. With Chas. Copp for county supervisor Makawao would be in no position to get further favors from a Republican board of supervisors. A vote for Copp will be a vote against further public improvements for the Makawao district.

Republican campaigners returning from Molokai predict that the Island will go Republican by a good majority, and that Theo. T. Meyer will beat O. Tollefsen hands down.

Vote the straight Republican ticket!

The Hana district is safely Republican and W. P. Haia, the Republican candidate for supervisor, will come in with a big vote.

It is generally reported if Judge Kopoikai is elected his law partner will hold down the deputy county attorney's chair.

The Republicans have made a clean campaign. The party speakers have refrained from abusing their opponents, and the MAUI NEWS is informed that the Democrats have also tried to make a clean fight for votes, with one notable exception. It is said on the streets that this particular candidate can neither read nor write, perhaps this is the key to the situation. If he could read the MAUI NEWS he would find many good things to talk about instead of repeating silly things picked up on the street. Voters of Wailuku are so worked up over what this Democrat had said about a Republican candidate from that town that no Wailuku Democrat will vote for him.

Vote the straight Republican ticket!

The Wailuku Band will play at a monster Republican rally in Lahaina this Saturday evening.

W. J. Coelho has been telling the Makawao district voters that the failure to re-appoint Chas. Copp as district magistrate for Makawao was due to the opposition of Mr. H. P. Baldwin. The facts are that both H. P. Baldwin and H. A. Baldwin recommended the re-appointment of Judge Copp district magistrate for Makawao and that the Judges of the Supreme Court made the change regardless of said recommendation.

This is the truth of the matter, and Tearful Willie is telling a wilful lie in laying the failure to re-appoint at the door of H. P. Baldwin, and he knows it.

Mr. Kopoikai has been telling the voters that D. H. Case, the regular Republican nominee for County Attorney is a corporation lawyer getting a regular monthly stipend from corporations. Kopoikai himself cannot deny the fact that his name appears on the monthly pay roll of a sugar corporation also.

The Puunene Carnival.

Last Saturday evening the Puunene Club held a very successful carnival and dance. The program as arranged by the committee was well carried out, the prizes all going to members of the Club. The swimming races were well contested and the diving features of the meet were skillfully carried out. After the swimming the party adjourned to the Club house where dance was enjoyed by the large assembly.
